YEAR COMPLETED

USKH provided architectural services to remodel an existing historic barn into a state of the art Eastern Washington University campus police office. The 3,200 sf facility includes workspace, locker rooms with restrooms, and evidence processing and storage areas. The main floor mechanical, electrical, and communications systems were entirely replaced and upgraded. Complete security and access control systems were integrated into the final design.

EXCERPT FROM CLIENT LETTER OF APPRECIATION:

“It is often said that credit should be given where credit is due, and the credit you deserve on this project is well overdue. The design you created has been one of the best received and praised on our campus in recent times, which is impressive considering the budget and time constraints you were under at the time it was in design. I often use it as an example of how such obstacles can be overcome when the right design consultant is selected and empowered to perform at his/her best.

In reflecting back on our relationship during the project, I can recall the character traits that have set you at the top of my list of design consultants; your patience, ability to actively listen, willingness to follow when asked, and boldness to step forward and lead when needed. There are very few architects who do not possess the ability to design a project such as this, but equally few who follow through in every detail as you did.”
